The study examined up to 1,000 patients Patients in a deprived area of the UK face twice the risk of stroke as those in a more affluent area, a study suggests. The risk was found to be particularly high in deprived areas of Glasgow and Edinburgh. Lead author Prof Martin Peat, from University College London, said doctors should be aware of this risk when treating patients. The study suggests healthcare resources need to be targeted in deprived areas. Researchers analysed data from patients diagnosed with acute ischaemic stroke - a type of stroke - over a period of one year in Scotland. They found those in the most deprived areas were two to three times more likely to die or suffer a major stroke-related disability. The study is the first to look at stroke severity and mortality among deprived areas in Scotland
