If differences exist in urinary p-cresol levels across geographical regions or patient groups, the measurement of urinary p-cresol levels should be routinely applied in clinical settings to evaluate patients with CKD. A strength of this study is that we enrolled not only diabetic but also non-diabetic CKD patients. Second, the urinary p-cresol levels were measured by two different methods (i.e., LC-MS/MS and EIA). For the EIA, the urinary p-cresol levels tended to be higher than those measured by the LC-MS/MS method. However, p-cresol is the urinary metabolite of tyrosine, and we did not show the levels of tyrosine (dopamine derivative) in this study. It is unknown whether the measurement of p-cresol would be more accurate than tyrosine measurement. Conclusions [#Sec14] ===== In conclusion, our findings suggest that the urinary p-cresol levels reflect the severity of albuminuria and that they are associated with CKD progression.
