neoplasms: review and analysis of the relationship between EGF receptor mutation and EGFR gene amplification to

overexpression. Nasal neuroendocrine tumors (NET) arise from the sinonasal epithelium and express the epithelial growth factor receptor (EGFR). Approximately 50% of nasal NETs are characterized by EGF receptor (EGFR) gene amplification and mutation, a feature that predicts poor prognosis. However, the relationship between EGFR gene amplification and mutation is not well understood. The authors reviewed their experience with nasal NETs to better understand the significance of EGFR gene amplification and mutation and the corresponding clinical outcomes. The authors retrospectively reviewed the medical records of all patients with nasal NETs treated at Vanderbilt University Medical Center from 1998 to 2008. Clinicopathologic parameters, including EGFR gene amplification and mutation, were analyzed. Nineteen of 82 patients had sufficient tissue for analysis. Two patients (10.5%) had EGFR gene amplification, 16 (84.2%) had mutations, and 1 (5.3%) had both. EGFR mutation and gene amplification occurred equally within patients with and without metastases, whereas EGFR gene amplification occurred in 1 of 7 patients with recurrent NETs. Overall survival times were significantly shorter in patients with EGFR

---

gene

amplification/mutation than in those without these changes. EGFR gene amplification may represent an important therapeutic target in patients with NET,
whereas EGFR mutation

does not appear to play an important role. Further study of EGFR gene amplification may clarify the role of EGFR amplification in the development and progression of NETs. In the future it will be. You need a deadline because he will be on holidays or sick or the project will be too big to be completed in a week or whatever reason. What we actually need are SMEs, people that can finish a project in a reasonable period of time.
